PLANT COTTON AND BE FREE, OR PLANT COTTON AND BE WHIPPED.—The Columbus (Ga.) Sun says:

"This is the naked state of the question. How much cotton shall we plan?" If there has been any doubt upon the subject, the events of the past few weeks have completely dispelled them, and we have now the fact, "pure and simple." All the valor of Southern soldiers will be powerless against grim hunger and gaunt famine, such as will overwhelm and crush us if we insanely raise cotton instead of corn."

PRESIDENT DAVIS AND MR. WIGFALL, A CHARACTERISTIC SCENE.—Mr. Wigfall, of Texas, is one of that sort of men, we take it, whose bump of reverence has no large development to impress him with an uncomfortable feeling of awe in the presence of greatness. We will describe a scene between him and the President, as it was described to us:

Wigfall—Davis, you are a great man, a smart man, a head smarter than I am.

The President—(Replies with a nasal grunt not susceptible of being indicated by any combination of the letters of the alphabet.)

Wigfall—Davis, you are a mighty know-ing man, but if I were in your place, as the Chief Magistrate of this struggling young Republic, I would know a sight more than you do, and a great deal that you won't.

The President—(Putting on an air of prim indignity replies with two grunts.)

Wigfall—Davis, if I were President, as you are, I should deem it a duty I should owe to my country, to know something of what others know. I would put myself in free and easy communication with men of mind, whether in official or private station, to seek information from them, and in order that I might profit by them in the conduct of the great affairs of state. No man is so omniscient but that he may learn something by association and free converse with his fellows.

(Exit the President consulting his watch.)
